Hundreds of hospitals in rural communities across the country are barely hanging on and many have already closed, contributing to the growing rural healthcare crisis in the U.S. In fact, according to a recent report, more than 600 hospitals — nearly 30 percent of rural U.S. hospitals – are at risk of closing in the near future.

Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Hawaii, Kansas, Mississippi, New York, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Texas have the highest number of at-risk rural hospitals, according to the report.

This is why the recent announcement by UB Community Development, LLC (UBCD) of $9 million in New Markets Tax Credit financing for the construction of a new surgical center on Northwest Florida Healthcare, Inc.’s existing campus in Chipley, Florida is the definition of a community-changing success story.

Northwest Florida Community Hospital is a 59-bed facility that houses a 25-bed critical access hospital, a 34-bed long-term care facility and health care clinics. They also have an Express Care Clinic, Family Health Care Clinic in Chipley and clinics in Graceville, Bonifay, Marianna and Vernon, Florida.

The current surgical facilities are at capacity, limiting the number of patients served. The project will add an additional 14,000-square-foot facility and offer inpatient and outpatient surgical services, giving patients better access to surgical care in Washington County and surrounding counties. The new facility will also employ approximately 29 employees.

“By, Through and With is a common phrase we use in the military to describe how we carry out our mission in concert with our allies,” said Alex Jones, President of UBCD. “Assisting Northwest Florida Healthcare in the funding of their new surgery center is a case study of working with partners to achieve a desired outcome.
